Job Evaluation

Studies and Reports, New Series, No. 56

A study of some methods of measuring jobs which take into consideration such factors as the skill required, the education, experience, initiative and ingenuity needed, the effort whether physical, mental or visual demanded, the degree of responsibility required, working conditions, occupational hazards, etc. The aim of job evaluation is to ensure equal pay for jobs demanding broadly equivalent sacrifices and to reward the greater efforts and hardships involved in some jobs as compared with others.
